GUIDE TO THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA.

A SKETCH OF THE GEOLOGY OF PHILADELPHIA AND ITS SURROUNDINGS.

Within a radius of twenty miles around the centre of the city of Philadelphia deposits belonging to no less than six of the great divisions recognized by geologists are met with, namely, Laurentian, Cambrian, Silurian, Triassic, Cretaceous, and Tertiary. The city proper itself, with its suburbs Germantown, Chestnut Hill, Manayunk, Bryn Mawr, etc., occupies an area of highly disturbed schists and gneisses which extend back (north-west) from the Delaware River for a distance of twelve or more miles. The exact relations which the rocks of this series hold to the rock masses lying to the north and north-west of them have not yet been satisfactorily ascertained, and, indeed, the opinions of geologists vary very greatly as to the position which ought to be assigned to them in the geological scale. While by some they are considered to represent the Montalban (Huronian?) period, by others they are classed with the (upper) Silurian, and even the Devonian has been indicated as possibly representing their true age. The dip throughout a considerable portion of the area occupied by the rocks in question, which have a possible development of 10 to 20,000 feet, is to the north and north-west, at an angle varying from  $15^{\circ}$  to  $20^{\circ}$  to vertical: but the involution (?) of the axis causes deflections to the east and south-east as well. Along the northern edge of the formation the dip is to the south-east. Two parallel discontinuous belts of serpentine, with uncertain relationships, lie in the line of strike along the northern border. The Schuylkill series of rocks abut in the north for a very considerable part of their course against a mass of syenitic or granitic gneiss, referable to the Laurentian period, which rapidly widens westward from the Wissahickon Creek, and extends eastward from the same stream in a continuous belt to a point on the Delaware River opposite Trenton, N. J. The rock formations which succeed to the north of this Laurentian belt, which is considered to represent the most ancient land area in the region, and which, through its resistance to erosion, constitutes a prominent ridge throughout its entire course, are a series of sandstones and conglomerates (the Primal of Rogers), containing Scolithus (S. linearis?), and probably correctly referred to the Potsdam period (Cambrian); limestone (Auroral of Rogers), magnesian in considerable part, forming the depression of Montgomery and Chester valleys; and doubtless belonging to the (lower) Silurian age, although from the almost total absence of fossil remains, the precise determination of age has not yet been effected; and slates and quartzan micaceous schists ("hydro-mica schists"), possibly of Hudson River age (lower Silurian), but by many geologists considered to be older than the limestones and sandstones, which form a prominent ridge known as the South Valley Hill, flanking the Chester county limestone on the south. Flanking the South Valley Hill rocks on the north, and lying conformably (?) between these and the limestones, there runs a narrow belt of alternating slates and limestones (Trenton? lower Silurian), which may or may not effect a transition between the true limestones and the hydra-mica schists. Nowhere between the various formations here indicated and the rocks of the Philadelphia series has a positive chronological relationship been as yet determined; hence the great uncertainty as to the age of the last mentioned deposits. Beyond the depression of Montgomery and Chester counties the Potsdam sandstone reappears, forming the northern boundary (North Valley Hill, etc.) to the limestone valley. The structure of the valley west of the Schuylkill is as yet undetermined, being by some described as that of a synclinal, and by others as a monoclinical; east of it appears to be a compressed synclinal, the strata over the greater width of the western half dipping steeply to the south. A trap dyke of triassic or post-triassic age crossing the Schuylkill at Conshohocken, cuts through the line of "hydra-mica schists" and limestones in the direction of their strike. The area immediately north of the Paleozoic rocks is occupied by the triassic red sandstones, shales, and conglomerates, which form a direct continuation of the similar deposits of New Jersey, and extend in a continuous belt, swing to the south, through the State to the Maryland boundary (thence through Maryland to Virginia). The strata themselves, with a moderate dip to the north and north-west, rest uncomformably upon the eroded edges of the Paleozoic rocks.

None of the formations that have heretofore been referred to appear to the east of the Delaware River (i. e., in New Jersey) until we reach Trenton, some twenty-five miles north-east of Philadelphia, where the Laurentian gneiss reappears. Doubtless, however, the Philadelphia gneisses and schists underlie the more recent formations of the State, the Cretaceous and Tertiary, the line of whose outcrops pretty nearly conforms with the trend (south-west-north-east) of the lower section of the Delaware and Atlantic border. The Cretaceous formations which occupy the western border of this portion of the State, appearing immediately on the river front, consist of a series of clays ("plastic clays"), marls, and green sands ("marl beds") aggregating a thickness of several hundred feet. The dip of the formation is to the south-east, about thirty feet to the mile. Fossil remains are sufficiently abundant, and distinctive of the formation to which they belong. Paleontologically considered, at least three distinct horizons are marked off: 1. A lower one, with Inoceramus, Trigonia, etc.; 2. A middle one, with Exogyra costata and Belemnitella mucronata, and an upper one with Gryphæa vesiculosa and Terebratulæ Harlani. These three divisions fall within the limits of the upper Cretaceous of Europe ("Sennonian"). Following these in many places is found a layer of yellow lime and sand, abundantly stocked with Bryozoa and Echinoderm fragments, which would seem to be the representative of the "Maestrichtian."

No satisfactory evidence of any early Cretaceous formation (Wealden) has as yet been afforded as existing in the State, the Unio beds at the Fish House, a few miles above Camden, being now known to belong to a late Tertiary or to a post-Tertiary period. Among the Cretaceous saurian remains are representatives of the genera Hadrosaurus, Laelaps, Mosasaurus, Clidastes, Hyposaurus and Thoracosaurus. East of the Cretaceous area are the deposits of Tertiary age, Eocene and Miocene, the former of which extends as a narrow discontinuous belt north-eastward through the State, abutting against the Atlantic a little south of Long Branch.

The character of the fossil remains indicates a low horizon, probably that of the Thanet sands or the lower "Suessonian." Resting with a slight unconformability upon the Eocene, and covered by a superficial deposit of sand and gravel of as yet an undetermined age, are the Miocene beds, whose horizon appears to be approximately that of the lower (or both lower and upper) "Mediterranean." Fossil remains have thus far been but very sparingly collected from this formation.

The immediate surface deposits upon which the city of Philadelphia is built consist in principal part of a series of boulder clays, sands, and fossiliferous gravels, collectively known as the "brick clays" and "red gravels" (the former overlying the latter), whose origin is traced to the period of the first melting or retreat of the great northern glacier, whose edge appears to have advanced to within about sixty miles of the city. The bed of the Delaware River along the site of the city, as well as the shore line of the city itself, is occupied by a newer gravel, the "Trenton gravel," which probably represents the last sub-glacial outflow from the north. Underlying the red gravel there occurs a deposit of "yellow gravel" of uncertain age, which also covers a very considerable portion of Southern New Jersey, still resting upon some of the higher eminences there, and which, from a prominent exposure at the town of Glassboro, is also sometimes known as the "Glassboro gravel." Capping the summits of some of the highest hills in the Philadelphia gneiss region, and attaining a maximum elevation of about 450 feet, we find still another and yet older gravel, known as the "Bryn Mawr gravel," the well-rounded quartzite pebbles of which are in places firmly bound together by iron into a compact reddish-brown rock. The same gravel, which seemingly represents the beach line of the former Atlantic, also occupies the crests of the New Jersey lowland hills, and continues southward over a very considerable extent of the Atlantic border. Its precise age still remains to be determined, it being considered to be Tertiary or, possibly, Cretaceous.

The above sketch of the geology of Philadelphia and vicinity has been kindly prepared for the Local Committee by PROF. ANGELO HEILPRIN, Curator of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia.

SKETCH OF PHILADELPHIA.

In 1681 Philadelphia was planned and located by William Penn, Friend and Proprietary Governor of West Jersey. The purchase was made from the Indians, and the spot where the treaty was held is now marked by a monument. The city was incorporated in 1701, and chartered in 1789, from which time it grew in population and prosperity.

It was here that the Continental Congress held its first session after the "Signing of the Declaration," which took place July 8, 1776. Here resided the first President of the United States, and in this city the Supreme Court held its first session.

The city is the largest and most important in the State, and in population the second of the Union. As to location and natural advantages none could be better. The extent and convenience of inland and ocean traffic, the water-power, and close proximity to vast coal fields, the benefits of a most excellent and healthful climate, all conduce to the growth and prosperity of the city.

The city has an area of a hundred square miles, more than half of which is occupied by immense structures, such as factories, ware- and store-houses, and buildings of all kinds, not forgetting to mention the thousands of tastefully built dwelling-houses, for which the city is noted, and from which it sometimes derives the name of "Philadelphia, the City of Homes." In the city proper there are more than 500 churches, and nearly 450 public schools, employing 2,500 teachers, educating 100,000 children. Although a large territory is covered, all parts are easily accessible, there being ample facilities in the way of car, cab, and cable transportation. Among the institutions likely to be of interest to the members of the Association are the following :—

ACADEMY OF NATURAL SCIENCES,

Logan Square—Cor. Nineteenth and Race Streets.

The Academy of Natural Sciences, the oldest institution in the country devoted exclusively to the cultivation of the natural sciences, dates to the second decade of the present century. From the year of its official incorporation, 1817, up to the present time, its progress has been well marked and steady, and although several institutions have sprung up about it as rivals during the intervening period, it still retains precedence as far as wealth of collections and the completeness of a consulting library are concerned. Its active workers have always comprised many of the most distinguished names connected with the history of American science.

Although the primary object of the Academy is the promotion of original investigation by means of the varied facilities offered within its walls, and the dissemination of the results of such investigation through publication in its "Journal" and "Proceedings," the former issued at irregular intervals, the latter of which one volume is published annually, the institution has latterly added to its functions the systematic teaching of science. Four professorships, covering the fields of Archæology and Ethnology, Invertebrate Zoology, Invertebrate Paleontology, and Mineralogy, respectively, are now filled, and regular courses of instruction in these departments, and also in Geology, are given annually.

The library comprises about 30,000 volumes, and is by far the most complete scientific library in the country. Of the collections, the most important is that of the birds, which numbers about 35,000 specimens, and which is only equaled by the collections of the British Museum, the Burg of Vienna, and the Natural History Museum of Leyden, Holland. A large proportion of Gould's and Prince Bonaparte's types will be found here. The reptiles and fishes are also abundantly represented, and likewise comprise a very large number of type specimens; less of praise can be bestowed upon the collection of recent mammalia. The Morton cranio-logical collection is one of the most extensive of its kind. The most complete department is that of Conchology, which, as far as the number of species and specimens is concerned, is better represented than in any other institution, European or American.

The Academy is very rich in fossil remains, both vertebrate and invertebrate, and claims a first place in the representation of the stratigraphical series. The mineralogical collection has recently received great accessions through the bequest of the late Mr. W. S. Vaux, and has now but few rivals in this country or elsewhere. The herbarium numbers about 25,000 species of flowering plants—about one-fourth the total number of species recognized by botanists—and ranks after that of Cambridge, Mass., as the most complete in the country. Among other collections it comprises those of Schweinitz, Nuttall, and Pickering.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY,

Fifth Street below Chestnut.

In 1743 Benjamin Franklin, who did so much to excite and promote the love of literature, science, and human progress in the minds of conservative Philadelphia, originated the American Philosophical Society.

The subjects which it was proposed that the society should consider and investigate included researches in botany, medicine, mineralogy, mining, mechanics, mathematics, chemistry, arts, trades, geology, agriculture, etc. Among its original members were John Bartram, Thomas Godfrey, Samuel Rhodes, Thomas Hopkinson, William Coleman, with Franklin as secretary, men of eminence and distinction in their day. The society continued its meetings successfully for ten years, after which, through non-support on the part of the citizens, it remained inactive for a period of more than twenty years. In 1769 the American Philosophical Society and the American Society held at Philadelphia for Promoting Useful Knowledge, were merged into a single association. A new code of laws was now adopted by the society, which was then called "The American Philosophical Society held at Philadelphia for Promoting Useful Knowledge," with Franklin as president. From the date of this union, measures were inaugurated and prosecuted in the various channels of scientific knowledge and research. In 1780 the society was incorporated, and in 1785 ground was bought for a hall, to be used as a permanent location for the library. The building was begun in 1785 and completed in 1791, and, with but slight change, stands intact as originally constructed. In 1801 were classed among its members the distinguished names of Thomas Jefferson, General James Wilkinson, Casper Wistar, Adam Seibert, Charles Wilson Peale, and General Jonathan Williams. Among its presidents have been Benjamin Franklin, David Rittenhouse, Thomas Jefferson, Casper Wistar,

Robert Patterson, and William Tilghman. The library, an admirable one, contains nearly 23,000 volumes, in various languages, many of which are rare and valuable. The arrangement of the books on the shelves being numerical, affords a ready reference. The plan of the catalogue is distinctly original, the subjects being divided into eight classes, viz.: From the universal to the subject; from the abstract to the concrete; inorganic to organic, and from matter to mind, each class beginning with the theory of the subject and following with its practice.

To attempt to recount the achievements of this, the oldest scientific institution in the United States, during its one hundred and forty years of varied history, or to seek to epitomize the results of its valuable researches, would be a task of great magnitude; suffice it to say its scope has been a broad and powerful one, to the salutary effects of which an enlightened people will gladly testify.

THE FRANKLIN INSTITUTE,

Seventh Street below Market.

Was founded in 1824, as an institution for the promotion of the mechanic arts, then in their infancy in this country. During the course of its existence it has been under the leadership of men distinguished alike for their scientific attainments and personal worth. Associated with its past history are the well-known names of Merrick, Bache, Ronaldson, Keating, Baldwin, Agnew, Espey, Mitchell, and others of equal eminence, while its present roll embraces those who are fully identified and associated with the learning and industry of Philadelphia. The Institute hall is a substantial structure of blue stone, built in 1825, and has been occupied by the Institute to the present day. Upon the first floor are located the lecture-room, chemical and physical laboratories; the second is occupied by the library, which is exclusively scientific and technical in its character, and contains all the standard and current works upon mechanics, engineering, chemistry, physics, etc., complete files of the publications of the principal learned societies of the world, besides complete sets of British, American and French patent reports. The extent and condition of the library render it the most complete of its kind in the United States. The upper floor is entirely devoted to the uses of the drawing-classes, male and female, pursuing studies in mechanical, architectural, and free-hand drawing. The drawing-school has been carried on uninterruptedly since the establishment of the Institute, and is in a flourishing condition.

In the collections of the Institute, rich in models, books, instruments, etc., are to be seen interesting relics, among which may be mentioned Dr. Franklin's electrical machines, Godfrey's quadrant, the original Morse telegraph apparatus, models of Evans' high-pressure engines, and many others.

In 1826 the Institute commenced the publication of the Journal, devoted to science and the mechanical arts, which has had an uninterrupted existence to the present day. It contains the records of the scientific work of the Institute, besides many valuable contributions respecting the growth of American industries, and is esteemed at home and abroad as a standard work of reference.

The giving of annual courses of lectures has been a feature of the Institute since its foundation, and they constitute one of the most attractive and valuable privileges of membership. At the monthly meetings, held ten months of the year, papers on scientific and mechanical subjects are read, new inventions described, models exhibited, etc. The meetings are largely attended. The Institute has a membership of over seventeen hundred.

INTERNATIONAL ELECTRICAL EXHIBITION.

The International Electrical Exhibition will be held under the auspices of the Franklin Institute of the State of Pennsylvania for the Promotion of the Mechanic Arts.

Extensive preparations have been made by the managers for this event, and the exhibition will doubtless be a brilliant and representative one. Being the first exhibition held in this country which is devoted exclusively to the progressive science of electricity, and under the patronage of an institution of such eminence, it has attracted an unusual share of interest. The exhibits will represent the modern advances in electric lighting, the transmission of power, electro-plating, telegraphy, the telephone and its congeners, electric clocks, electric signaling apparatus, electric musical instruments, insulating materials, wires, cables, and other conductors, methods of manufacture, and an endless number of miscellaneous applications of electricity. There will also be a special exhibition of historical electrical apparatus, and of the literature of electricity, both of which will have special interest for the student.

The exhibition will be held in a special building, erected by the Institute for the purpose, at Thirty-second and Lancaster Avenue, and in the adjoining passenger depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the two buildings being temporarily connected. The total exhibiting space thus afforded will be about 150,000 square feet. The buildings are readily reached by the cars of the Market and Chestnut and Walnut Street railways, and by the Pennsylvania Railroad from the Broad Street Station.

The exhibition will be opened September 2, and will close on October 11, 1884.

The hours of daily opening and closing are from 10 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Single admission, fifty cents, or five (5) coupon tickets, two dollars.

Children, half price.

THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The buildings connected with this institution are the largest college buildings in the country. The building for the departments of science and arts stands on Locust Street between 33d and 34th Streets, and is 254 feet long by 124 feet deep. The ground contains more than six acres.

The style of architecture is the Collegiate-Gothic. The material used is gray stone and green serpentine rock. On the east and west front large towers rise to prominence. The building entire, with its gables, pinnacles, and buttresses, its bay and oriel windows, makes an attractive appearance. The foundation was laid in 1871, and the building finished October, 1872. The cost was $236,000.

The school is divided into departments of Law, Science, Arts, Medicine, Dentistry, Music, Finance and Economy, Philosophy, and Veterinary Surgery. There are 50 free scholarships, having an annual value of $7500, devoted to the use of scholars of the public schools of Philadelphia.

The Department of Law, for which the late Chief-Justice Sharswood felt such an interest, is most efficient and useful. Its graduates are recognized by the courts of Philadelphia as competent for admission to the bar.

The Scientific Department embraces complete courses in Chemistry, Geology and Mining, Civil and Mechanical Engineering, Draining, Architecture, and Preparatory Medicine. The school has been greatly enriched by the endowment provided in 1872 by the late John Henry Towne.

The Departments of Arts and Medicine, found below, need no further mention than that they are presided over by professors of well-known ability, and that many graduates from these departments now occupy places of honor, which they fill with distinction.

The Department of Dentistry, established in 1878, derives great advantage from the benefits of association with the medical school, and stands relatively high in the estimation of the public.

The Department of Music, established in 1877, is a school for advanced students. The preparation of a original musical composition, and a rigid examination on the principles of music, are necessary to obtain the degree of Bachelor of Music.

The Department of Finance and Economy, founded by Joseph Wharton in 1881, bears his name. Its purpose is to give a thorough general and professional training to young men who are about to engage in business. It possesses the most complete library on finance and economy that is known to exist.

The Department of Philosophy, organized in 1882, embraces post-graduate instruction in literature and science. The faculty is composed of the principal professors of the other departments. Its requirements are high, and a degree is conferred only after rigid examination in the more advanced studies.

The Department of Veterinary Medicine is the last established. Its aim is to give a thorough and scientific education in veterinary medicine. The buildings and grounds devoted to its use are ample and well equipped, having every facility for thorough work in veterinary surgery, and care of domestic animals.

To Dr. William Shippen and Dr. John Morgan is to be given the credit of instituting and founding the Medical School. In 1765 the department was formally organized, with Dr. Morgan as its efficient head. The first commencement was held June, 1768, when the degree of Bachelor of Medicine was conferred upon ten gentlemen, the first medical graduates in America.

Under the succession of distinguished men, who for more than a century have made Philadelphia illustrious as a centre of medical learning, the department has ever maintained the foremost place among the institutions for medical education in this country. In recent years, changes in the system of teaching, the introduction of many subordinate subjects of instruction under skilful specialists, vastly enlarged facilities for laboratory work, and increase in the requirements necessary to entrance, have rendered it one of the highest medical schools in the land.

The new building, opened in 1874, is built in a style of architecture in harmony with that of the main university, and is complete in all the requirements of a school of its nature, there being two large lecture-rooms, a laboratory, museum, and clinic room, also dissecting and surgical departments. There are accommodations for 600 students, besides apartments for the faculty and assistants. Practical surgical and clinical instruction is afforded by practice in the hospital, which is located on the same ground. The grounds of the University and its extensions may be reached by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and cars of the Chestnut and Walnut Streets Passenger Railway.

JEFFERSON MEDICAL COLLEGE,

Tenth Street between Walnut and Sansom.

• Stands in the front rank of medical institutions in the country—in the number of its students, completeness of its equipment, and the learned ability and reputation of its faculty. It was founded by Dr. George McClellan, who came to the city with this aim in view. The project was bitterly opposed by the members of the medical fraternity, who thought that a new college might work great injury to the school already established; nevertheless the College, after much opposition, was established and chartered in 1826.

The high standard of personal talent represented in the early existence of the College has been maintained ever since, and they have been in almost every case men of national, and oftentimes international, reputation.

The original location of the College was at 518 Prune Street; now Locust, where the old Walnut Street Prison was in full view on one side, and the Pauper's Burial Ground, now Washington Square, on the other.

In 1829, the College was removed to its present location, where a plain brick building, standing with its gable to the street, was erected.

The continued growth of the institution rendered more space necessary, and in the summer of 1881 the main building was remodeled by an extension to the front and an additional building on Sansom Street. There are commodious dissecting rooms, with every convenient appliance, well-lighted class rooms, a laboratory for experimental therapeutics and pharmacy, another for microscopic work, and one for pathological histology and morbid anatomy.

In this building are also contained extensive and valuable anatomical, surgical and pathological museums, which are annually enriched by important additions.

The course, originally four months, has been lengthened to nine, and three years constitute a course of study, after which a diploma is granted, with all the rights and privileges of the institution.

WOMAN'S MEDICAL COLLEGE,

N. W. Cor. North College Ave. and North 21st St.

Is a handsome brick building especially constructed for the use of the institution. The building was commenced in 1874 and finished and occupied in October, 1875. There are numerous class- and lecture-rooms, and a moderate library for the use of the students. The institution was formed in order to insure a medical education to women, there being great prejudice against females being furnished with proper facilities for medical study in other institutions. The majority of the professors are women, having all the necessary ability and qualifications for instructors. Many of the graduates are now in successful practice. The woman's hospital which adjoins the college, furnishes clinical advantages. The College was originally formed in 1849, and was the first distinctive medical school for women in the world. The institution is reached by cars of the Continental, Girard Avenue and Union lines.

WAGNER FREE INSTITUTE,

S. W. Cor. Seventeenth and Montgomery Avenue.

This institution was founded in 1855, by Prof. William Wagner, a retired merchant of Philadelphia. It contains a valuable scientific and miscellaneous library, philosophical and chemical apparatus, cabinets of minerals, models, and curiosities. A course of free lectures on miscellaneous subjects is given every winter in the large lecture-room, which has capacity for twelve hundred visitors. The founder was originally a merchant, and having been highly successful in business, retired many years ago. Desiring to put his wealth to some good purpose, and having scientific tastes, he devoted himself and his wealth to the project of this institution. The ground was purchased and the building erected at his expense. It has been maintained as a means of benefit to the people. The winter lectures are held nightly, except Sunday, and are delivered by men of well-known ability.

GIRARD COLLEGE.

The Institution occupies the tract of land extending from Ridge Avenue west to 25th Street, and from North to South College Avenue, containing nearly 41 acres of ground. The college was founded in 1833. The design of the main building is Grecian-Corinthian, and is 169 feet long by 111 feet in depth, surrounded by 38 fluted columns, which support a portico with architraves 21 feet in width and 55 feet in height, encompassed by richly carved capitals. The height of the structure is 97 feet, and is arched throughout with brick and stone. The floor and roof are of white marble, the latter weighing 970 tons. The great doors of the north and south fronts are 32 feet high and 16 feet wide. In the vestibule, in a sarcophagus, rest the ashes of Stephen Girard, merchant, mariner, and generous founder of the institution.

In a room in the main building, especially devoted to the purpose, are found personal relics of Girard, among which are his gig, pieces of furniture, etc. The cost of the main edifice was $2,000,000. In 1878 a chapel and primary school building were erected, at an expense of $350,000, and in the spring of 1884 the mechanical building was finished at a cost of $45,000. Nearly the entire wealth of Stephen Girard was bequeathed for the founding of this institution, which was intended to benefit and educate poor white male orphans.

The inmates are bound apprentices to the corporation of Philadelphia, and are indentured from the institution between the ages of 14 and 18, optional with themselves. From this institution have emanated some of our representative citizens, men who hold high positions of honor and trust, and who stand as living eulogies of Girard's beneficence. Girard was antagonistic to all ministerial teachings—so much so, that in his will he forbade entrance to the institution to any ecclesiastic missionary or minister of any sect for any purpose whatsoever.

PENNSYLVANIA ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,

Broad Street above Arch.

Organized by a party of gentlemen, in Independence Hall, in 1805, and incorporated in 1806. The first structure, located on Chestnut Street below 11th, to which large additions were made in 1846, becoming insufficient, was vacated, and the collection transferred to the building now occupied. The present Academy is built of brick and stone, in the Byzantine or Venetian style of architecture, and is thoroughly fire-proof. Over the broad portal on Broad Street stands the mutilated colossal statue of the goddess Ceres, which was dug up at Megara, Greece, and presented to the Academy by Com. Patterson. Entrance to the school is obtained by the applicant who can show a drawing indicating sufficient capacity. The essential features of the course are lectures on Artistic Anatomy, Perspective, and a treatise on the styles of Architecture. The combined hall and staircase of the building, the principal ornamentation, is of Ohio sandstone. The shafts of the supporting columns are of Victoria and Rose Crystal marbles and Jersey granite. The capitals of the interior columns are of French Eschalon marble, and the railing of the main staircase solid bronze. The entire cost of the structure was about $400,000, and for the purpose intended is the largest and completest in the United States. On entering, to the right we find the library, containing some 1200 volumes, the contents of which are devoted entirely to art. Among the books we may mention the valuable work of Piranesi (in 24 folio vols.), "Les Antiquites Romaines," the same being one of five copies in the United States, and the Phillips' collection of books on Engravers and Engraving. Next is the print room, where are stored many thousands of engravings, etchings and mezzotints. Here is deposited the John S. Phillips' collection of engravings and etchings, more than 60,000 in number. The donor was a retired merchant of the city, and spent the latter years of his life in making the collection which he so generously presented to the institution.

Adjoining the library are the rooms devoted to the Antique. Here are reproductions of the "Apollo," the

"Antinous of Belvedere," the "Laocoon," the "Torso Belvedere," and the "Meleager," the "Venus of the Capital," the "Dying Gladiator," etc., besides copies of the Elgin and other English marbles. Still further on are the rooms for drapery, painting, and for the life class. On the south side is a large lecture room, with proper retiring rooms; and to the rear, modeling and private rooms, devoted to the use of the professors and students. In the gallery, which contains a large hallway, are placed statues of marble and bronze. Here is a fine group, by Steinhauser, of Rome, of "Hero and Leander;" "Penelope," by Rinaldi, the last of Canova's pupils; "The Prodigal's Return," by the American, Mozier; also busts by Palmer and Powers; "Spring" and "Proserpine," and Barzaghi's "Pharaoh's Finding of Moses." On either side of the hallway are six picture galleries, of various sizes and forms. In the galleries on the south side are found the most valuable specimens which the Academy possesses, among which are Bouguereau's "Orestes," Janssen's "Peter Denying Christ," Vanderlyn's "Ariadne in Naxos;" works of Farufini, Gastoldi, Van Dyck, Vanderhelst, and Wittkamp; specimens by Stuart, Allston, Huntington, Picknell, and West's famous "Christ Rejected." Special mention should be made of the Carey and Earl collections, which form a principal part of the general collection. In 1880, the Academy was the recipient of a donation of $60,000 from Joseph E. Temple; also the disposition of the Charles Toppa prize, which amounts to one hundred dollars a year.

THE PHILADELPHIA SCHOOL OF DESIGN FOR WOMEN,

S. W. Cor. Broad and Master Sts. (occupying the building once the home of Edwin Forrest, the actor).

One of the most noted and worthy institutions of art in this country, and certainly in Philadelphia, is the School of Design for Women. The aim of this institution is to systematically train young women in a knowledge of the principles and practices of the art of design and of all the connected branches of art study, to develop their talents in this direction, and to qualify them for the practical application of art to the common uses of daily life. The origin of the school dates back to 1847, when it was founded by Mrs. Peter, wife of the British Consul at Philadelphia, and was opened in rented apartments in Walnut Street. In 1853 it was incorporated, and in 1863, moved to more convenient quarters; these, in consequence of the growth and success of the school, becoming insufficient, the present building was purchased and altered to suit the necessary requirements of the institution.

The edifice has dimensions of 100 feet on Broad Street by 200 feet on Master Street, and embraces a well-lighted gallery for the statues possessed by the school, with school-rooms adapted to the special needs of each class, a lecture-room and conservatory, with ample grounds to which the students can resort for recreation. The locality is, in all respects, one of the finest in the city—healthy and easy of access.

That the school has been eminently successful in its object and aim, and affords the fullest gratification to its

"Antinous of Belvedere," the "Laocoon," the "Torso Belvedere," and the "Meleager," the "Venus of the Capital," the "Dying Gladiator," etc., besides copies of the Elgin and other English marbles. ## THE PHILADELPHIA SCHOOL OF DESIGN FOR WOMEN,

S. W. Cor. Broad and Master Sts. (occupying the building once the home of Edwin Forrest, the actor).

One of the most noted and worthy institutions of art in this country, and certainly in Philadelphia, is the School of Design for Women. The aim of this institution is to systematically train young women in a knowledge of the principles and practices of the art of design and of all the connected branches of art study, to develop their talents in this direction, and to qualify them for the practical application of art to the common uses of daily life. The locality is, in all respects, one of the finest in the city—healthy and easy of access.

That the school has been eminently successful in its object and aim, and affords the fullest gratification to its supporters and directors, was fully exemplified by the last Commencement Exercises and Annual Exhibition of work done during the past year (June, 1883-84). The display was of unusual interest, there being shown more than a thousand examples of original work, among which were sketches in oil, crayon, and water-color, besides more than two hundred examples of china-painting, specimens of oil-cloth and carpet designs, patterns for shawls, book-covers, screens, and casts in plaster and clay for moulding, carving and figure-work.

The number of graduates this year was 260, the majority of whom will take up art as a means of livelihood.

THE PHILADELPHIA LIBRARY,

Locust Street, between Broad and Thirteenth.

This institution was the outcome of "the first literary society in the province," which was formed in 1728, with Benjamin Franklin at the head, and was organized and founded in 1731. The meetings were held in a small house located in Jones' Alley, afterwards called Pewter Platter Alley.

In consequence of the books growing in number, and the houseroom becoming insufficient, the books and apparatus of the concern were removed to a room in the State-House, Chestnut Street below Sixth. In 1742 a charter was granted by Thomas Penn, Proprietary Governor. The institution continuing prosperous and successful, a change was again effected, this time to the second floor of the Carpenters' Hall building, Chestnut Street below Fourth, which place was rented (1772) for £36 per annum. At this period the librarian received the munificent sum of £5 per year for his services, out of which he paid an assistant!

In the spring of 1789 a committee was appointed to select and locate a spot for a library building, and on the 31st of August the foundation-stone was laid. The building, with room for 10,000 volumes, was finished in 1791, and in 1792 the last work of adornment, a statue of Benjamin Franklin by Lazzarina, was placed in a niche in the front of the building (Fifth and Library Streets).

In 1792 the library was enriched by the gift of James Logan, who presented entire the books of the Loganian Library, which collection numbered some 3,500 volumes, making a grand total of 11,000 volumes, and a membership of more than 500; certainly a remarkable statement, bespeaking the high regard for literature held by our ancestors.

In 1869 the library fund was enriched by an extraordinary contribution. Dr. James Rush left his estate, amounting to nearly a million dollars, to the company, and the money was used by the executor in erecting on the square fronting Broad and bounded by Christian, Carpenter, and Thirteenth Streets, a grand edifice, to be devoted to library uses, and known as the Ridgway-Rush Library. There was a certain restriction in the will to which, the Philadelphia Library would not reconcile themselves, and in accordance with the intentions of the donator in case these restrictions should go unrespected, the library was opened as a free institution, and henceforth recognized as the Ridgway branch of the Philadelphia Library.

The Library Company, not content with the prospect of the new building through the munificence of Dr. Rush, and having an extensive building fund, determined in 1870 to inaugurate measures toward the erection of a suitable structure, and in 1879 the corner-stone of the new building was laid. The new structure, which is chiefly built of brick, while bearing marks of no particular style of architecture, is pleasing to the eye, and although not seeming to resemble the old library, was constructed in the interior as regards arrangement after the plan of the original building.

Among the books may be found some of the rarest of imprints, notably the specimens by Caxton, Jinson Fust and Schaefer, of Pynson, Wynkn de Worde and Pannartz, a work on natural history by Pliny, and "Verard's Book of Prayers" (Paris, 1496). In the department of Americana will be found "Eliot's Indian Bible," Bradford's "American Mercury," the first Pennsylvania newspaper, and the first volume of Franklin's newspaper, "The Pennsylvania Gazette," etc. Among the manuscripts will be found specimens of the Arabic, Japanese, Chinese, and Hebraic.

The hours of admission are from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M.

THE MERCANTILE LIBRARY,

Founded in 1821 by a company of merchants, mechanics, clerks, and others. The Mercantile Library, as its name implies, was not originally a company, but an "association." It was not composed of shareholders, having certificates of stock, but of members paying initiatory fees and semi-annual contributions. In 1824 the library contained fifteen hundred volumes, with about four hundred members. In 1826 it was changed to an incorporated company, charter obtained, and the property of the association valued at and divided into three hundred shares, subject to an annual tax of one dollar, afterwards increased, in 1831, to two dollars, and in 1862 to three dollars per annum, as was required to supply more fully the wants of the members. The Library was originally formed in the Masonic Hall, and its first place of regular meeting in rented rooms at Front and Chestnut Streets. After several removals, the final change to the present building was made in 1869. This structure was formerly a market-house, and was changed, at a cost of $100,000, to its present condition, one-half of which was paid by subscription, donation, and a loan. In 1864 the share-tax was raised to four dollars, and at the same time the annual charge to the subscribers was made six dollars. The library and reading-room have an area of 187 feet by 74 feet, with arched ceilings, ventilated windows, and side lights. The reading-room proper, which is in the west end of the building, is 67 feet by 74 feet, and divided by a low partition into two rooms—one for the female and the other for the male visitors. There is, in addition to this, a newspaper, and a chess-room, on the second floor, over the main entrance. The departments devoted to newspapers and periodicals are believed to be better supplied than those of any other library or reading-room in the country. On the first floor there are waiting- and conversation-room, ladies' parlor, directors' and lecture rooms. In 1875 a gallery was added, which furnishes space for 70,000 more volumes. Here are kept classical, theological, medical, and such books as were heretofore kept in locked cases. Although designed, as its name signifies, for the especial benefit of merchants and their clerks, the library has outgrown its original scope, and become a library of the city—ministering to the community in general, and furnishing a larger amount of reading than any other institution in the city.

ATHENÆUM LIBRARY,

Near the close of 1813, a number of gentlemen assembled for the purpose of establishing a reading-room in Philadelphia. Their first and immediate object was the collection, in some central locality, of American and foreign periodical publications of politics, literature, and science, and the collecting of dictionaries, maps, and works of general reference, to which access might be had at all hours of the day. The proposals for the Athenæum were made public, and met with cordial support. In 1824 the library consisted of 3,300 volumes, and the leading magazines and reviews of the times—literary, scientific, and historical. Fifty-five newspapers were regularly received and filed. The rooms were opened daily, except Sunday, from 8 A. M. until 10 P. M. The number of stockholders was 400, who, under the original charter, paid $25 principal upon each share of stock, and annual dues of $3. The Library had its quarters in the building of the American Philosophical Society for more than thirty years, afterwards removing to their present building, which was erected in 1847. This building has a fronting of 50 feet on Sixth Street, and a depth of 125 feet on Adelphi Street. It is an excellent specimen of Italian architecture, tasteful in appearance, yet simple in design. At present the large hall on the first floor is used as the library room of the Law Association of Philadelphia. The second story is used by the Athenæum, and is divided into a news-room, library, and chess-room. It has not been so much the purpose of the management to supply its members with current literary works as they come from the press, as to get together a collection of periodical literature of early days. Within the last few years, however, the policy has been inaugurated of placing the current literature at the disposal of the various members. The Athenæum at the present time contains about 25,000 volumes, besides numerous manuscripts, pamphlets and old newspapers. New books are being added at the rate of 500 a year, and the annual circulation is nearly 6,000 volumes.

THE APPRENTICES' LIBRARY,

S. W. Cor. Fifth and Arch Streets.

In 1820 a few benevolent individuals, believing that it would promote "orderly and virtuous habits, diffuse knowledge, and create a desire for knowledge, improve the scientific skill of our mechanics and manufacturers, increase the benefits of the system of general education which is now adopted, and advance the prosperity and happiness of the community," associated themselves together under the title of "The Apprentices' Library Company of Philadelphia," for the purpose of establishing a free library for the use of apprentices and other young persons.

In 1821 the company was incorporated, and operations commenced on a very limited scale, the only resources for a number of years being donations of second-hand books, and an annual contribution of two dollars from several hundred worthy citizens, who were convinced of the beneficial effects which would result from such a course of instruction.

The first president was the learned Horace Binney. The Library met with such success that it became necessary, in 1868, to enlarge the building to its present dimensions. Until recently the Library was divided into two distinct sections, one for males and the other for females. The maintenance of two separate library rooms rendered necessary a duplicate purchase of books, which, with other inconveniences, rendered this course so unsatisfactory that the management recommended the consolidation of the two sections. The Library was instituted, and still is almost entirely controlled, by members of the Society of Friends, and the management has ever been a conservative one, its immediate object being to supply working-people with good reading matter. At the present time there are about 25,000 bound volumes upon the shelves, and the number of readers is more than 10,000.

THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, S. W. Cor. Thirteenth and Locust Streets.

Founded in 1825 by a number of Philadelphians. The objects of the Society are to trace all the circumstances of early settlements, to collect all documents, written and printed evidence, all traditionary information obtainable, and after having acquired possession of such material, to publish such portions as may be deemed most interesting and instructive; to form an ample library and cabinet, to collect books, pamphlets, models, coins, and any articles drawing value from historical or biographical features, Indian idols, ornaments, arms, utensils, etc. The property of the Society consists of original letters, books, and journals of the early settlers of Pennsylvania and distinguished persons among us in later years; facts relating to the North American Indians and their language; accounts of missionaries, copies of record and proceedings of public bodies that have existed; topographical descriptions of cities, towns, and boroughs; accounts of population, births, longevity, deaths, epidemical and local diseases; evidence relating to climatology, meteorology, and general customs of districts; biographical notices of eminent and remarkable persons, etc.

The first place of regular meeting was in the rooms of the American Philosophical Society, Fifth and Chestnut Streets. The first volume of Memoirs of the Society was published in 1825. In 1844 the Society removed to new quarters, and in 1848 again removed to the Athenæum building, where it remained a quarter of a century, during which period great advancement was made. Finally, the collections growing to such proportions, another move was necessary, and a house located on the grounds of the Pennsylvania Hospital was taken and occupied until the present year, when the Society moved to the convenient and well-appointed building which it now occupies. During the Society's sixty years of investigation, much material of great value has been gathered. Of first importance is its library, which contains at the present time more than 20,000 volumes; among the rarities may be mentioned the unique Bradford imprint of 1686, being no less than the Pennsylvania Calendar, also the Thomas Budd imprint of 1685, the Eliot Bible (Cambridge, 1685), and the first two volumes of Keimer's Pennsylvania Gazette and Sanderson's Lives of the Signers, illustrated by original biographical letters. The collection of autograph letters is one of the best in existence. It includes Benjamin Franklin and Shippen papers, each of which contains a vast amount of historical, biographical, and antiquarian information. Among the pictures will be found Amerigo Vespucci, Hernando Cortez, John Hampden, William Penn, Benjamin Franklin, Washington, Lafayette, Wayne, Moultrie, Henry Knox, John Cadwalader, Reed, Mifflin, McKean, and many others.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY AND GARDEN,

The building and grounds, for comfort and convenience, are unexcelled in this country or Europe. The care taken of the animals, and the general cleanliness of the surroundings, have been universally praised by all visitors. The garden occupies 33 acres, and is handsomely laid out with walks and flower-beds. The collection of animals and birds is large, and comprises many rare and valuable specimens. The grounds can be reached by cars of the Girard Avenue and Race and Vine Streets Passenger Railways, also by the Schuylkill line of steamers. The cost of the building, which is owned by a stock company, was more than $60,000. The Zoological Society was incorporated in 1859, and in June, 1873, the Park Commissioners granted the Society the grounds now occupied, from which time the work has been vigorously prosecuted.

HORTICULTURAL HALL.

Located in the west Park, one-half mile above Memorial Hall, is a large building composed of iron and glass, and was one of the main features of the Centennial Exhibition. There are more than 7,000 specimens of rare and choice plants, trees and shrubs, etc. There are well kept lawns and walks tastefully arranged. Admission free, on application, between 9 A. M. and 6 P. M. During the winter season lectures on botany are given gratuitously.

MEMORIAL HALL.

Containing the Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art, is located in the west Park, formerly occupied by the Centennial Exhibition buildings, of which this was one. The building is in the style of the Renaissance, is fire-proof throughout, and the control, government, and regulations of the Hall are vested in the Legislature, who reinvest the same in the Park Commission, as appointed by the city.

The distinctive features of the building are the south entrance of arched doorways, the pavilions, arcade, windows, and the promenades, which command a panoramic view of the park. The central hallway is 287 feet by 83 feet, from which doors open to the galleries on all sides. The building contains 75,000 feet of wall-space, and 2,000 feet of floor-space for exhibits.

The Pennsylvania School of Industrial Art is patterned after the "South Kensington Museum," and is in time intended to embrace the advantage of developing the State industries, promoting instruction in drawing, modeling, designing, etc. The present exhibit is varied and elegant—art, manufactures, archæology, and science each contributing their quota of knowledge and representation.

The features of special interest are the fine specimens of china, embracing examples of Minton, Sevres, and Worcester ware; ivory, metal, and woodwork; Rothermel's "Battle of Gettysburg;" the mosaic altar, containing thousands of inlay, in colors; the Japanese suite; extensive coin collections; castings and mouldings; carvings; paintings and photographs; armor and Turkish hangings, etc. Admission free, by application, between the hours of 9.30 A. M. and 5 P. M.

FAIRMOUNT PARK.

Fairmount Park, situated on the Schuylkill River, and extending along the Wissahickon Creek from its mouth to Chestnut Hill, is the largest improved public pleasure ground in the world. It contains 2,991 acres, in which there are 36 miles of foot-walks, 30 miles of carriage drives, and 8 miles of bridal-paths. At the Callowhill street entrance are located the Fairmount water-works. Skirting the eastern bank of the stream are the handsome boat-houses of the Schuylkill Navy. Many interesting objects are to be seen within the Park limits. At the Green street entrance is the Pompeian Art Gallery which was presented to the city by the Hon. John Welsh. Within sight is the Lincoln monument, and a short distance above is the cottage which General Grant occupied at the siege of Richmond. The Park on the west side of the river will ever be memorable as the location of the Centennial Exhibition. Of the numerous buildings only a few remain. The most important are the Memorial and Horticultural Halls. A feature is the imposing fountain erected near George's Hill by the Catholic Total Abstinence Union. Monuments to Morton McMichael, William Penn, Humbo'dt, Christopher Columbus, Rev. Dr. Witherspoon, Religious Liberty, and numerous other works of art, occupy prominent places throughout the Park. The Zoological Garden is in the west Park, near Girard avenue bridge. Immediately opposite, on an elevated point, stands the Penn cottage, which was removed from Letitia Street. There are 22 statues, 16 decorative fountains, 20 drinking fountains, and 50 large flower vases in the Park.

Any one visiting Philadelphia, and failing to take a ride or stroll through the Park, misses one of the finest attractions of the city. For miles on both sides of the winding Schuylkill, stretching far back into the country, are hill, forest, and dale. As the broad domain of the people, it is free to all. It is unrivaled for natural scenery by any park in the world.

Though there are no feudal remains crowning the rocky bluffs of the river, there are upon its banks some old residences around which cling many reminiscences of the past. Entering the east Park at Fairmount, after passing the avenue of fine trees, the water-works, the dam across the river, boat-houses, Lincoln monument, and the rustic group of Tam O'Shanter, all objects of interest, are to be seen. The eminence rising rather abruptly from the drive, and finely wooded, was once the property of Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution, and was known as the Hills.

The property passed into the hands of Henry Pratt, who is said to have erected the residence now standing, changing the name to Lemon Hill, and making of the place what might be styled an exotic garden—green-houses filled with rare plants and choice fruits, such as grapes, oranges, and lemons, the luxuriant growth of the latter probably suggesting the name of Lemon Hill. Fish ponds also formed part of the adornment, from which the gold fish now in the Schuylkill are supposed to have had their origin.

After the death of Mr. Pratt things fell into ruin, and the property again changed hands, and was for a time used as a beer garden. Finally, the estate came into the possession of the city, and was the beginning of what is now Fairmount Park. After awhile "Sedgely," an adjoining property, was added, and by gradual additions the Park was extended from Lemon Hill to Laurel Hill Cemetery.

Not only along the river, but for a great portion of the distance as far back as Ridge avenue, the Park embraces within its limits many places of note, such as Mt. Pleasant (once the abode of Benedict Arnold), Ormiston, Sedgely, Strawberry Mansion, and other places. Close to where the Park joins Laurel Hill ran the Old Ford Road, once a highway of travel, when the Schuylkill was fordable, but now nearly forgotten. A fine carriage road stretches along the edge of the river by the side of the cemetery, through the village known as Falls of Schuylkill.

In the early days of the settlement of Pennsylvania, the Falls was a place of much resort, and was then called Fort St. David, and celebrated as a fishing-place for rockfish, catfish, and shad, and long afterwards noted for catfish and coffee. But Falls, rockfish, and shad have long since disappeared, and, though a stray catfish may sometimes be caught, it is not like those which made the Falls famous.

Leaving the Falls, the road leads to Wissahickon Creek, by the side of which it extends for miles, and a more delightful drive is not to be found. High craggy banks on both sides, thickly covered with fine timber, give a charm to the scene, making it what might be truly styled, the Gem of the Vale. But trying to perfume the rose is a useless task, and so it would be to attempt to describe the Wissahickon. It must be seen to be appreciated. There are some excellent places on the route where all kinds of refreshments may be had.

The most noted objects are the Hermit's Pool, Pipe Bridge, Indian Rock, and a large statue of William Penn. a gift to the city from the Hon. John Welsh. Returning to the Falls, and crossing the bridge to the west side, the river-road leads down to the city. Although a pleasant summer road, there is no object of interest on it until near Columbia Bridge, opposite Peter's Island, and there by the roadside stands a quaint little cottage which has somehow obtained notoriety on the supposition that Tom Moore, the celebrated Irish poet, resided there while visiting Philadelphia, but there is not the slightest proof that this was the case. However, as the tradition has in all probability been the means of saving it from destruction, let it remain.

If, instead of taking the river-road at the Falls, we return by way of Chamouni, we will find as fine a drive as any in the Park, affording charming views of the city. There are many spires standing out in bold relief against the sky, and many edifices can be seen. Amongst them Girard College, the Catholic Cathedral, and the Masonic Temple lift their majestic heads above all surroundings, proclaiming in silent and solemn grandeur, "We are supreme." The road runs along a high level plain, from which we may, after traveling some two miles, turn into Belmont Avenue, visit George's Hill, the Catholic fountain, Horticultural Hall, and other noted things on the Centennial Exhibition grounds, or pay our respects to Belmont mansion, where good entertainment may always be relied upon. The place was formerly known as Judge Peters' farm, and many reminiscences of Colonial and Revolutionary times still cling around it.

Of Lansdowne we have nothing left but its name.

Not a vestige of the mansion remains. Sweet-briar is a fine old house. At the outlet of Girard Avenue bridge, the old residence of William Penn, which formerly stood in Letitia Street, has been re-erected. Here once stood a mansion known as Eaglesfield, near which the Schuylkill Fishing Co., an old organization, had its headquarters.

In the Zoological Garden, close at hand, stands the old residence of John Penn, known as Solitude. There is nothing remarkable about the house itself, but the association of the great name of Penn has saved it from destruction. The place is tastefully laid out and well preserved. There are many other places and objects within the Park limits worth seeing, which cannot be described in a brief sketch.

NEW CITY HALL.

The New City Hall, at the intersection of Broad and Market streets, covers, exclusive of the court-yard, an area of four and a half acres. The north and south fronts measure 470 feet, and the east and west fronts 486½ feet, in their extreme length. The court-yard is 200 feet square. From the north side of this space rises a grand tower, which will be surmounted with a statue of William Penn, twenty feet in height, completing an altitude of 535 feet, making it the highest tower in the world. The entire structure will contain 520 rooms. Ground was broken for the building August 10, 1871. The first stone of the foundation was laid August 12, 1872. July 4, 1874, the corner-stone was laid with impressive ceremonies. The excavation for cellars and foundations required the removal of 141,500 cubic feet of earth.

The building is intended to house all the Courts, as well as the legislative and administrative branches of the city government. It unites architectural beauty and practical requirements, and does this by supplying room for future growth.

The question of site for erection was here, as elsewhere, one of great difficulty. The style is that of the Renaissance in the French order. A general wealth of ornament—pillars, pilasters, niches, statues, caryatides, and other sculptured work—enlivens the façade. The whole makes an impressive and agreeable impression, and will perpetuate the name of the architect, John McArthur, Jr., in lasting honor.

When the corner-stone was laid, the total cost was estimated at ten millions, and time for completion ten years. It has already cost twenty millions, and seven years will yet be required to complete it.

HOW TO SEE PHILADELPHIA.

The first thought upon entering a great metropolis like Philadelphia, will be the magnitude of the work which we have before us, if we attempt to see all its attractions. Its miles of highways stretching from League Island to Roxborough and from Point Breeze to Kensington; its vast commercial interests represented by Stores, Banks, Exchanges, Grain Elevators, Manufactories; its Public Buildings, Churches, Libraries, Art Exhibitions, Parks, Wharves, etc., confront us, and we are almost lost amidst what seems to the stranger an inextricable labyrinth. A few days will scarcely suffice for so great an undertaking, but if we can spend a week, we can accomplish much towards familiarizing ourselves with its principal objects of interest. The visitor will find that by a division of his time, devoting each day to a certain number of points of interest, he will be able to accomplish much more than would be otherwise possible.

With this end in view, we suggest the following arrangement of places and days, covering a period of one week:

First Day.—Independence Hall, Chestnut st. bel. Sixth. Carpenters' Hall, Chestnut street bel. Fourth. Custom House, Chestnut st. ab. Fourth. Franklin's Grave, Fifth and Arch sts. Christ Church, Second st. ab. Market. Girard's Bank, Third st. bel. Chestnut. New Post Office, Ninth and Chestnut sts. Mint, Chestnut st. bel. Broad. New City Hall, Broad and Market sts. Masonic Temple, Broad and Filbert sts. Academy of Natural Sciences, Nineteenth and Race sts.

Second Day.—Academy of Fine Arts, Broad st. ab. Arch. Jefferson Medical College, Tenth and Sansom sts. Mercantile Library, Tenth street ab. Chestnut. Franklin Institute, Seventh st. bel. Market. Phila. Library, Locust st. bel. Broad. Penna. Historical Society, Thirteenth and Locust sts. University of Penna., Thirty-fourth and Locust sts. Woodland Cemetery, Thirty-ninth and Woodland ave. Bartram's Botanical Garden, Fifty-fourth and Darby road. Abattoir, Thirtieth and Market sts. Blockley Almshouse, Thirty-fourth and South sts.

Third Day.—Old Swedes' Church, Swanson st. ab. Washington ave. Moyamensing Prison, Passyunk ave. and Reed st. Ridgway Library, Broad and Carpenter sts. Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Broad and Pine sts. Union League, Broad and Sansom sts. School of Design, Broad and Master sts.

Fourth Day.—Neafie & Levy's Ship-yard, Beach and Palmer sts. Cramp's Dry-dock, Beach ab. Vienna st. William Penn Treaty Tree, Beach and Hanover sts. Arsenal at Bridesburg. House of Correction, Holmesburg. Penna. Institution for Blind, Twentieth and Race sts.

Fifth Day.—Girard College, Corinthian ave. and Girard ave. House of Refuge, Twenty-second and Poplar sts. Eastern Penitentiary, Twenty-second and Fairmount ave. Zoological Garden, western end of Girard ave. bridge.

Sixth Day.—Fairmount Park, including Memorial Hall, Horticultural Hall, and other places mentioned in our description of the Park on page 39, Laurel Hill Cemetery, Ridge ave. and Clearfield st.

A day may also be profitably spent in visiting Germantown, a beautiful suburban portion of the city. Here will be found the Germantown battle ground, and the Chew Mansion on Germantown ave., places of great historic interest.

If the visitor remains in the city on Sunday, he will, by reference to our Church Directory, find his way readily to any of the churches of the various denominations, amongst which will be found some of the most elegant structures devoted to public worship in the country.

PLACES HAVING HISTORIC ASSOCIATIONS.

Germantown Battle Ground.—Situated on the main street, Germantown, above Johnson street, the site of a famous battle of the American Revolution, fought October 4, 1777. Upon the ground stands the old Chew Mansion, in which the British intrenched themselves and opened a heavy fire upon the Americans.

Mount Pleasant.—Situated on the east side of the Schuylkill, near the Reading Railroad bridge. It was owned by Benedict Arnold while military governor of Pennsylvania. It was for a short time the residence of Baron Steuben, of Revolutionary fame. General Williams, a Revolutionary character, occupied it for many years.

Lemon Hill.—Situated in Fairmount Park. The house, now used as a place of refreshment for visitors in the Park, was the residence of Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution.

Solitude.—Now within the enclosure of the grounds of the Zoological Garden ; for many years the residence of John Penn, son of one of the proprietors of Pennsylvania.

Penn Mansion.—Situated at Lansdowne, just to the west of the Girard Avenue bridge, near Zoological Garden. Was originally situated in Letitia Street, but torn down recently and removed to its present position. It was the first house built in the city. In it Wm. Penn resided during his visit in 1682-83.

Independence Hall.—Situated on Chestnut street below Sixth. It is open to visitors from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M. In the east room, first floor, the Second Congress voted the Declaration of Independence. The furniture in this room is the same as was used on that occasion. In the west room is a very valuable collection of relics covering the most interesting period of American history, consisting of wearing apparel, articles of vertu, etc., owned or used by revolutionary heroes, also many of their portraits, and West's celebrated painting of Penn's Treaty. The Old Liberty Bell, which rung out the Liberty proclamation on July 8, 1776, may be seen in the rotunda. Adjoining the State House is the building in which Washington was inaugurated the first President of the United States.

Carpenters' Hall.—On Chestnut street below Fourth. This building was originally intended as a meeting-place for the house carpenters of Philadelphia, and was built in 1771. It was here that the Continental Congress met in the year 1774. It was afterwards used as the first Bank of the United States. It is now owned by the Carpenters' Company of Philadelphia. The furniture and fittings are the same as used by the Continental Congress more than a century ago.

St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church.—"Old St. Joseph's" Catholic Church is in Willings' alley, back of Walnut street, between Third and Fourth, and is the succession of the first Catholic chapel founded in Philadelphia on the same site in 1732. The present edifice is regarded by the Catholics of Philadelphia with peculiar affection, as being the inheritor of the historic memories connected with early missionary efforts in America.

Christ Church.—Second street above Market. This edifice was built in 1727-31. The steeple was placed in 1753, and contains a chime of eight bells, which were brought from London in 1754. The communion plate was presented by Queen Anne in 1708 and bears the impress of the royal arms. It was here that George Whitefield preached, and Washington and Franklin worshipped.

Old Swedes' Church (Gloria Dei).—Swanson street below Christian. This venerable structure was built by the Swedes in 1700, and is the oldest church in Philadelphia. It occupies the site of a former church built in 1624. In its burying ground will be found headstones bearing dates as far back as 1612. Wilson, the ornithologist, lies here.

John Bartram's Botanical Garden, situated on the Schuylkill, near Fifty-fourth street and Darby road, will well repay a visit. It can be reached by the Pennsylvania Railroad from station, Broad and Filbert, or street cars running out Darby road to Fifty-sixth street. John Bartram, the original owner of the garden, was the first distinguished American botanist. He lived here for many years in the pursuit of his favorite science. It is one of the few suburban landmarks still remaining which link the present with Colonial days.

BRIDGES OVER THE SCHUYLKILL.

Fourteen bridges span the Schuylkill River within the city limits. Girard Avenue Bridge, the widest in the world, is 1500 feet in length, 100 feet wide, and cost $1,500,000. Chestnut St. Bridge is 1528 feet in length, and cost $500,000. Market St. Bridge is 1300 feet long, and cost $60,000. Callowhill St. Bridge is 1300 feet long, and cost $1,600,000. South St. Bridge is 1400 feet long, and cost $780,000. Connecting Bridge, belonging to the Pennsylvania Railroad, with the approaches, is 2200 feet long. Penrose Ferry Drawbridge, is 1000 feet long. Gray's Ferry Bridge has a length of 900 feet. The other bridges are the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Bridge, the Falls of Schuylkill Bridge, and two wooden bridges at Manayunk.

HANSOMS (CAB SERVICE).

A recent innovation on the cab service of this city was the adoption by the Penna. and Reading Railroads of the "Hansom." This vehicle, with seating capacity for two, conveys the traveler to all parts of the city from the several depots of the above companies at a cost (25 cents per mile) of but little more than the existing street-car fare.
